QUESTIONS PRESENTED

Did the Supreme Court of Appeals of the State of West Virginia err in declaring a ruling retroactive that a municipal fire protection service fee constituted a prohibited tax and thus deny the constitutional rights of citizens who had paid for the service by permitting those who had not paid for the service to escape liability.

Whether the difference in treatment of a city's citizens by a ruling of a state court of last resort in announcing new principles of law transgresses the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF WEST VIRGINIA

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals will be reported at _____ W.Va. _____, _____ S.E. 2d _____ (1983). The opinion of the lower court was not reported. (Appendix infra, p. 52.)

JURISDICTION

The opinion of the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals was entered on July 13, 1983. The Order denying rehearing was entered on October 14, 1983. (Appendix infra, p. 24.) The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1257

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION AND STATUTES INVOLVED

1. The Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution which provides:

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State where they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

2. The State Constitution, although nothing herein turns on its terms, was Section 1 of Article 10 which provides in pertinent part:

> The aggregate of taxes assessed in any one year upon personal property employed exclusively in agriculture, including horticulture and grazing products of agriculture as above defined, including livestock, while owned by the producer, and money, notes, bonds, bills and accounts receivable, stocks and other similar intangible personal property shall not exceed fifty cents on each one hundred dollars of value thereon and upon all property owned, used and occupied by the owner thereof exclusively for residential purposes and upon farms occupied and cultivated by their owners or bona fide tenants one dollar; and upon all other property situated outside of municipalities, one dollar and fifty cents; and upon all other property situated within municipalities, two dollars . . . .

3. The statute involved, although nothing herein turns on its terms, was West Virginia Code § 8-13-13 which provides in pertinent part:

> Notwithstanding any charter provisions to the contrary, every municipality which furnishes any essential or special municipal service, including, but not limited to, police and fire protection, parking facilities on the streets or otherwise, parks and recreational facilities, street cleaning, street lighting, street maintenance and improvement, sewerage and sewage disposal, and the collection and disposal of garbage, refuse, waste, ashes, trash and any other similar matter, shall have plenary power and authority to provide by ordinance for the installation, continuance, maintenance or improvement of such service, for the installation, continuance, maintenance or improvement of such service, to make reasonable regulations with respect thereto, and to impose by ordinance upon the users of such service reasonable rates, fees and charges to be collected in the manner specified in the ordinance . . . .

4. The municipal ordinance, adopted pursuant to the authority provided in the foregoing statute, was City Ordinance No. 221, as amended, which provides:

> Section 1: Finding and Declaration: In the judgment of Council, the public health, safety, welfare and well-being of the residents of the City demands the continuance, maintenance and improvement of the essential service of fire protection within the City, and as the public revenues of the City are not sufficient for the purpose of providing adequate fire protection within the City, it therefore appears necessary under the provisions of West Virginia Code § 8-13-13, that in order to provide for the continuance, maintenance and improvement of the esential and special service of fire protection within the City, it is necessary that there be imposed upon the users of such special service such rates, fees and rentals as are required to pay the cost of the special service of fire protection;

Section 2: Levied: There is imposed and assessed upon the respective owners of all residential, commercial, industrial or other buildings of every kind and nature regardless of the type or types of construction, situated within the City, the amount of fifty-five cents ($.55) per one hundred dollars ($100.00) of the value of such residential, commercial, industrial or other buildings, the value being that as fixed for tax purposes by the Assessor of the County, or by the Board of Public Works of the State, and where no value has been fixed then the value shall be determined and fixed by the Finance Director. In order to determine such value when no value has been fixed for tax purposes as aforesaid, the Finance Director may make or cause to be made such reports, investigations and surveys as may be requisite.

There is hereby imposed and assessed upon the respective owners of all tangible personal property, goods and chattels located within the City, the amount of fifty-five cents ($.55) per one hundred dollars ($100.00) of the value of such personal property, as aforesaid, the value being that as fixed for tax purposes by the Assessor of the County, or by the Board of Public Works of the State, and where no such value has been fixed then the value shall be determined and fixed by the Finance Director. In order to determine such value when no value has been fixed for tax purposes as aforesaid, the Finance Director may make or cause to be made such reports, investigations and surveys as may be requisite.

Section 3: Collections: The rate and fees levied and assessed by this article shall be collected from each such user in two semiannual installments; the first of such installments being due and payable on October 1 of each year and a like installment being due and payable on April 1 of each year. Such rates, fees and rentals imposed, levied and assessed pursuant to this article shall be collected in the same manner as Municipal taxes are collected under the statutes of the State by the Sheriff of the County, provided that the City shall reimburse and pay such Sheriff for the costs of such collections so make; provided further, however, that such rates, fees and rentals as are levied and imposed against property otherwise exempt from taxation, or otherwise not collected by the Sheriff, shall be collected by the City Treasurer.

Section 4: Collection Year: The rates, fees and rentals imposed, levied and assessed by this article shall be collected semiannually as set forth in the preceding section, the collection year running from July 1 of one year to June 30 of the following year.

Section 5: Delinquent Payments; Discounts: The rates and fees assessed pursuant to the provisions of this article shall be a debt due the City and may be collected by proceedings instituted in courts of appropriate jurisdiction, or in such manner as provided by West Virginia Code § 8-13-15. A penalty of ten percent (10%) of the rate or fee shall be added for any default for a period of thirty days or less in payment of such rate or fee, and for each succeeding thirty days elapsing thereafter before payment there shall be an additional penalty of one and one-half percent (1.5%). Provided that a discount of two and one-half percent (2.5%) shall be allowed on the first semiannual installment payment due October 1 if paid thirty days prior to such date each year, and a like discount of two and one-half percent (2.5%) shall be allowed on the second semiannual installment payment due April 1 if paid thirty days prior to such date each year.

Section 6: Use of Funds: (a) The funds, moneys and revenues received from the collection of the rates, fees and rentals provided for by this article shall be used only for the continuance, maintenance or improvement of the essential or special service of fire protection within the City and no part of such funds, moneys or revenues shall be used for any other Municipal purpose except as provided in subsection (b) hereof.

(b) A sum not to exceed five percent (5%) of all fees, rates and rentals collected annually shall be used by the Water Commission for the installation or maintenance, repair and replacement of fire lines and hydrants situated within the corporate limits of the City.

Section 7: Rates levied in addition to other taxes: The rates, fees and rentals imposed, levied and assessed by this article shall be in addition to all other licenses and taxes levied by the statutes of the State or by the provisions of this Code or other ordinances of the City and the payments thereof shall be a condition precedent to the use and enjoyment of the special and essential service of fire protection within the City.

Section 8: Refusal to pay: No person shall refuse to pay the rates, fees or rentals provided for by this article, of aid or abet another person to avoid the payment of such fees or rentals imposed by this article.

Section 9: Rules and Regulations: Council shall have the right to make and promulgate from time to time hereafter suitable regulations governing the service provided for by this article, and the making of statements of accounts, the collection thereof and other proper and appropriate regulations as it may deem proper or necessary for the enforcement of this article.

Section 10: Definitions: (a) "Fire protection" as used in this article, means the benefit to property from the stationing of fire services apparatus, the employment, training and stationing of fire fighting personnel, and the continuous availability of such essential service as provided by the City.

(b) "User" includes any person owning buildings or other structures or improvements situated on real estate within the City and also includes the owners of any tangible personal property, goods and chattels in the City.

Section 11: Penalty: Whoever violates any provisions of this article, or refuses or neglects to pay the rates, fees and rentals herein provided to be paid or fails or refuses to abide by and comply with any of the rules and regulations promulgated by Council to effectuate the provisions of this article shall be punished as provided by Section 101.99.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. BACKGROUND: In 1932, the voters of West Virginia ratified a tax limitation amendment to the state constitution. The result was to reduce tax revenue to all governmental bodies. See Finlayson v. City of Shinnston, 113 W.Va. 434, 441, 168 S.E. 479, 482 (1933) (Hatcher, J., concurring.)

In 1933, the legislature of the State authorized municipalities to furnish essential or special municipal services, including fire protection, and to impose upon the users of such services, reasonable fees and charges. See West Virginia Code § 8-4-20 (1921). The 1933 statute is substantially the same as West Virginia Code § 8-13-13 (1976) which is in effect today.

In 1938, the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia upheld the imposition of fire fees under the 1933 statute, but, in dicta, raised the issue of whether a fee based upon the assessed value of property would be in violation of the limitation amendment. McCoy v. City of Sistersville, 120 W.Va. 471, 478, 199 S.E. 260, 263 (1938). Any question raised in McCoy as to the tax limitation had seemed to be resolved by City of Charleston v. Board of Education, 209 S.E. 2d 55 (W.Va. 1974), and by statute.

In 1939, a statute, Code § 8-15-3, authorized value-based fees for extra-territorial fire service. The law was well settled in West Virginia, a value-based fee was permissible.

But, in the fall of last year, contrary to state precedent, a police protection fee was struck down as constituting an ad valorem tax in violation of the Tax Limitation Amendment because it was imposed only on property owners and was based on the value of property, Hare v. City of Wheeling, 298 S.E. 2d 820 (W.Va. 1982).

B. PROCEEDINGS BELOW: While Hare was being decided, there were fire fee collection cases pending before local courts. It appeared that Hare had implicitly overruled the line of authority on fire fees and a trial court held the City of Fairmont's fire fee scheme unconstitutional. The Fairmont fee, like the fee in McCoy and City of Charleston, was based on property valuation.

The trial court then certified two issues to the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals. The first was whether the Hare decision controlled the constitutional challenge to Fairmont's fire fee. The second was, assuming the charge was invalid, whether the ruling would be prospective or retrospective in its application. The learned trial judge had held it prospective only, which would permit the municipality to pursue those who had defaulted in payment of the fire protection service charge. (See Appendix at p. 33.)

The appellate court ruled that the fee was unconstitutional since a charge which is ad valorem in character is by definition a tax. And, as a tax, it violated the limitation amendment. Thus, the State Supreme Court effectively overruled City of Charleston v. Board of Education and its progeny.

Further, and at issue here, the court declared the ruling retrospective in nature, thus those who had defaulted in payment were able to escape liability for the service rendered. But for those who had paid for the service rendered, the Court ruled that a voluntary payment of a tax which is later declared unconstitutional cannot be recovered. (Appendix at p. 42-43.)

By a petition for rehearing the City raised the constitutional questions presented by the Supreme Court of Appeals' decision concerning retrospective application of its ruling. The appellate court denied the motion without opinion.

ARGUMENT

I.

A MUNICIPAL CORPORATION HAS STANDING TO REPRESENT THE INTERESTS OF ITS CITIZENS.

The fire protection service charge is unlike typical municipal fees for garbage removal, water and sewer utility services. The service necessarily involves the expenditure of large sums of money for maintenance of equipment and stationing of fire fighting personnel for the benefit of those whose buildings require more fire protection than the general public. It is this availability of fire protection that is valuable to building owners. (See City Ordinance, Section 10.) Therefore, the costs incurred by the city to maintain the availability of that fire-fighting capacity is a service already rendered for which the City may charge a fee. See West Virginia Code § 8-13-13.

The State Supreme Court's decision has set up two classes of citizens in the City of Fairmont. Both classes have received the benefit of having had available to them a trained and equipped fire department, but only one class of citizen will have been required to pay for the service as a result of the court's overruling decision.

When the service was rendered, the law of the State of West Virginia was that the municipal service charge was a fee not a tax. It did not become a "tax," and invalid, until the State Supreme Court repudiated its prior rule and made it retroactive. The City was not only deprived of its right to recover the delinquency but the paying citizen then bore all the financial burden of paying for the service rendered.[1]

A municipality has a duty to ensure equal treatment of its citizens, even by the decision of a state court of last resort. Pursuit of the public good[2] in behalf of its citizens gives a municipality standing[3] in this matter.

II.

IN DETERMINING THAT THE LEVY WAS A TAX NOT A FEE THE APPELLATE COURT ANNOUNCED NEW PRINCIPLES OF LAW.

The propriety of imposing the costs of fire protection had been sanctioned both judicially and legislatively. These sanctions had been acted upon by municipal officials in adopting the ordinance. They had been acted upon by the purchase of fire-fighting equipment and the training and stationing of firemen. And, most significantly, the sanction

[2]"Municipal corporations or municipalities are public, as distinguished from private, corporations and are treated for political purposes and endowed with political powers to be exercised for the public good in the administration of local civil government." Rhyne, The Law of Local Government Operations, § 1.3; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat 518, 699 (1819.)

[3]A municipal corporation is generally regarded by the courts as a subordinate branch of the government of a state. Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U.S. 540 (1876); McQuillin, Municipal Corporations § 2.08a, at 142 (1971). A state stands in parens patriae in behalf of its citizens and may pursue its citizens best interests. See Missouri v. Illinois, 180 U.S. 208 (1901); Georgia v. Tennessee Copper Company, 206 U.S. 230 (1945) see also Ohio v. Wyandotte Chemicals Corporation, 401 U.S. 493 (1971); Washington v. GMC, 406 U.S. 109 (1972); Illinois v. City of Milwaukee, 406 U.S. 91 (1972); South Carolina v. Katzenbach, 383 U.S. 301 (1966); Georgia v. Pennsylvania R.R., 342 U.S. 431 (1945). Therefore, it follows that a municipal corporation may pursue the best interests of its citizens.

Organizations have standing to sue for the protection of their members. See NAACP v. Button, 391 U.S. 415 (1963); Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U.S. 727 (1972). So too, a municipal corporation has standing to protect the interests of one class of its citizens and to ensure the equal treatment of all its citizens under the law. Cf. Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925.)

had been acted upon by a majority of the city's citizens who voluntarily paid the fire service fee. The most recent decision of the State Supreme Court repudiates its earlier construction of the law, and announced new principles to the detriment of citizens relying upon an ordinance considered valid at that time. It has been recognized that a governmental body, as a representative of the interests of society in general, may have relied upon a subsequently overruled precedent, and that under such circumstances an overruling decision may properly be denied retroactive effect in order to protect the interests of society. Annot., 10 A.L.R. 3d. supra, at 1387.

The legislative authority relied upon was West Virginia Code § 8-15-3 (1976). That Code section directs municipalities furnishing fire protection to property outside the municipal limits to fix the charges therefore by reference to the assessed value of similar property within the city limits. The State Supreme Court implicitly held unconstitutional West Virginia Code § 8-15-3 in the instant case, which until the court's decision, was a factor upon which a municipality and its citizen could rely.[4]

In McCoy v. Sisterville, supra, the State Supreme Court, despite the dicta questioning a property based fee, found that owners of buildings were fairly considered to be the users of fire protection service, and therefore were the proper parties to pay the fee based on valuation. 120 W.Va. at 478, 199 S.E. at 263. This was quoted with approval recently in Ellison v. City of Parkersburg, 284 S.E. 2d 903, 905 (W.Va. 1981).

While McCoy may have questioned a property based fee, the state court earlier that year had recognized the distinction between a fee and a tax. Duling Brothers v. City of [4]Rights acquired under decisions involving other branches of the law are entitled to as much protection as rights acquired under decisions involving statutory or constitutional construction. Annot., 10 A.L.R. 3d, supra, at 1389.

Huntington, 120 W.Va. 85, 90, 196 S.E. 552, 554-555 (1938). In Duling, the court said:

> A local assessment is to pay the expenses by an improvement designed to benefit the property of the payor. Taxation, in its usual application is to pay the expenses of a government designed to benefit the payor as a member of organized society. From the one payment, the benefit to the payor is special; from the other, general. Consequently, while an assessment for a local improvement is an exercise of the taxing powers, the assessment is generally not considered taxative, within constructional and statutory restrictions of that power. Id.

Further, in McCoy the court stated that given the historical background of the act providing for special services, a liberal interpretation was required and a "departure from the general rule applied to construction of tax laws." 120 W.Va. at 480, 199 S.E. at 264.

Thus municipalities and their citizens had not only relied upon the legislative precedent of Code § 8-15-3, but early judicial precedent. More recently, in 1974, a fire fee based upon property valuation was upheld in City of Charleston v. Board of Education, supra. City v. Charleston was based on the holding in Duling. 209 S.E. 2d at 57. In overruling all of this precedent the state court ignored generally recognized principles of law.[4] [4] As a general proposition of law, a "tax" is to promote the general welfare of citizens. See 71 AmJur 2d, State and Local Taxation, §§ 1, 2 (1974); Cooley, The Law of Taxation (4th Ed.) § 1. A "fee," on the other hand, is for a special benefit to property, such as fire protection. See 71 Am. Jur. 2d, supra, § 21; McQuillin, Municipal Corporations, § 44.02.

This Court has also recognized the distinction between fees and taxes on various occasions. E.g. National Cable Television Association v. United States, 415 U.S. 336, 343 (1974); Federal Power Commission v. New England Power Co., 415 U.S. 345, 351 (1974); Packet v. Keokuk, 95 U.S. 80, 84 (1877.)

Special assessments, for special benefits, may be ad valorem in nature so long as they bear a reasonable relationship to the benefits conferred. See McQuillin, Municipal Corporations, § 38.122.

To be sure, the correctness of the State Court's decision is not at issue here. What is at issue is the retroactive application of the decision in the face of stare decisis. (See dissent, Neely J., Appendix at p. 68.) The defenestration of such precedent denies the citizens of Fairmont procedural due process of law.

III.

MODERN DECISIONS RECOGNIZE A DOCTRINE OF NON-RETROACTIVITY WHEN ANNOUNCING NEW PRINCIPLES OF LAW.

In early decisions, courts established a policy in favor of treating all overruling decisions as operating retrospectively as well as prospectively. Under this traditional view the courts merely discovered and announced existing law which they had no hand in creating. In essence, the act of overruling was a confession that the earlier rule should have not been applied at all. Annot., 10 A.L.R. 3d 1371, 1378-1382.

Modern decisions take a more pragmatic view. These decisions recognize the power of a court to (1) adopt the new rule prospectively so as not even apply to the parties; (2) limit retroactive effect to the parties only; (3) limit retroactive effect to govern all cases pending when the overruled case was decided; or (4) apply the new rule generally, even to cases where "final" judgments were entered prior to the overruling case. Annot., 10 A.L.R. 3d, supra, at 1378-1379.

Mr. Justice Clark discussed the foundations for applying overruling decisions in a prospective or retroactive manner in Linkletter v. Walker, 381 U.S. 618 (1965). There he noted that Blackstone stated the view that the duty of courts was not to "pronounce a new law, but to maintain and expound the old one." 381 U.S. at 622-23. While on the other hand, "Austin maintained that judges do in fact do something more than discover law; they make it interstitially by filling in with judicial interpretation the vague, indefinite, or generic statutory or common-law terms that are but empty crevices of the law." 381 U.S. at 624. In filling in the cracks, or changing the shape of the law, courts may immediately change the established relationships of everyone who falls within the scope of the law.

Austin's point was echoed by Mr. Chief Justice Hughes in Chicot County Drainage District v. Baxter State Bank, 308 U.S. 371 (1940):

> [T]he actual existence of the law prior to the determination of unconstitutionality is an operative fact and may have consequences which cannot justly be ignored. The past cannot always be erased by a new judicial declaration. 381 U.S. at 625.

Mr. Chief Justice Burger agreed in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 411 U.S. 192 (1973):

> [T]hat statutory or even judge made rules of law are hard facts on which people must rely in making decisions and in shaping their conduct. This fact of legal life underpins our modern decisions recognizing a doctrine of non-retroactivity. 411 U.S. at 199.

As the dissent of Mr. Justice Neely emphasizes below, nothing has changed since the McCoy decision upheld value based fees. The state constitution has not changed, nor has the statute changed. This is a preeminent case where the doctrine of stare decisis should apply. (Appendix, infra at p. 46 ~~58.~~) The City submits that its citizens should be able to rely upon both the past judicial sanction of such a fee system as well the legislative sanction. These are hard facts which shaped the conduct of a municipality and its citizens for many years.

IV.

RESPECTING THE DOCTRINE OF RETROACTIVITY OF OVERRULING DECISIONS MAY DENY DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

In civil matters, but not in a constitutional context, this Court has acknowledged that the traditional doctrine of retroactivity may deny justice without any compensating gain beyond preserving the fiction that courts "find" the law.

A series of municipal bond cases came before the court in the last half of the nineteenth century. In those cases the court applied state court rulings as prospective only. Beginning with Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 68 U.S. 175 (1863), and later in Douglass v. County of Pike, 101 U.S. 677 (1879), state high courts had reversed themselves and found legislation authorizing the issuance of bonds impermissible. This Court found that judicial construction of a statute was tantamount to amendment of the statute. 101 U.S. at 687. The Court stressed the reliance which parties had placed on the only legal guidelines available when the bonds were issued. Note, Prospective Overruling and Retroactive Application in the Federal Courts, 71 Yale L.J., 907, 919 (1962). See also Cipriano v. City of Houma, 395 U.S. 701, 706 (1969); Chevron Oil v. Huson, 404 U.S. 97 (1971); Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Machinery Corporation, 392 U.S. 481 (1968).

The application of new rules of law, both judge-made and statutory, have risen to constitutional proportions from time to time.

For example, while legislative enactments are usually limited to prospective application, legislation which is retroactive may be unconstitutional because it violates the contract clause of the Constitution. See United States Trust Company v. New Jersey, 431 U.S. 1 (1977); Allied Structural Steel Co. v. Spannaus, 438 U.S. 23 (1978); Hochman, The Supreme Court and the Constitutionality of Retroactive Legislation, 73 Harv. L. Rev. 692, 693 (1960).

Retroactive legislation may also be unconstitutional under the due process provisions of the Fifth or Fourteenth Amendments. See Hochman, supra, note 36, at 693. And, relating to the retroactivity of criminal statutes, the ex post facto provisions of the Constitution prohibit the federal government and states from imposing punishment for conduct before the law was enacted. E.g. Calder v. Bull, 3 U.S. 386 (1798); Lindsey v. Washington, 301 U.S. 397 (1937); Dobbert v. Florida, 432 U.S. 282 (1977).

With regard to judicial decisions, the traditional view, that it was the duty of the courts to expound upon the law and not to announce new law, has also taken on constitutional proportions. For example, if the law has always been what the most recent judicial decision declares it to be, it is possible that a person's actions could later be judged by retroactive application of a judicial decision. While this may not violate ex post facto prohibitions, Ross v. Oregon, 227 U.S. 150, 161 (1913), it does offend due process of law. Bouie v. City of Columbia, 378 U.S. 347 (1964).

Bouie taught that the construction of a statute by a state court of last resort which expanded the definition of a crime was a violation of due process just as if it were an ex post facto law. 378 U.S. at 353-354. See also James v. United States, 366 U.S. 213, 224, (1961); Mullaney v. Wilbur, 421 U.S. 684, 690 (1975).

The West Virginia Supreme Court in its decision has expanded the definition of a tax to include what has traditionally been recognized as a fee for municipal services. In doing so, it has effectively made invalid that which was valid in the doing, and has offended the same protections of due process considered by the Bouie court.

In civil cases in the 1930's, this Court was specifically asked to pass upon the constitutionality of prospective overruling of a judicial precedent, and, in a separate case, to decide the constitutionality of retrospective overruling of a line of decisions.

In Brinkerhoff-Faris Trust & Savings Co. v. Hill, 281 U.S.

673 (1930), the plaintiff sought to enjoin the treasurer of the county from collecting certain taxes. The plaintiff had relied upon what was believed to be well settled law in that state. 281 U.S. at 677, n. 2. The state court of last resort, however, overruled the precedent and applied it retrospectively. The net effect was to preclude the taxpayer from defending itself from the alleged illegal tax. This was found to be a deprivation of property without due process of law. Id. at 679.

In Great Northern Railway v. Sunburst Oil and Refinery Company, 287 U.S. 358 (1932), a Montana statute gave a railway commission the authority to fix rates. In a state supreme court decision, the commission had been authorized to fix reparation to carriers or shippers for excesses or deficiencies in payments when the rate schedule was modified by the railway commission. Sunburst sued Great Northern to recover excess payments. The state high court overruled its prior decision and applied it prospectively, thus allowing Sunburst to recover. Great Northern was granted certiorari to consider the claim that it was then denied due process of law. While the issue directly confronted only involved prospective overruling of state precedent, Mr. Justice Cardozo, for the Court, went on to declare that Montana could choose to apply its decision either prospectively or retroactively under the Constitution. 287 U.S. at 365-367.

Mr. Justice Cardozo acknowledged Brinkerhoff-Faris in Sunburst and stated that litigants have frequently argued that it is unconstitutional to declare "invalid what was valid in the doing." Id. at 394. Thus the Court will "review, not the wisdom of their (state courts) philosophies, but the legality of their acts." 286 U.S. at 365.

Sunburst did not overrule Brinkerhoff-Faris, but recognized that due process will protect against arbitrary action of the courts. Thus, as applied in some cases, retroactive overruling of prior precedent may deny due process of law.[8] This Court still recognizes the Brinkerhoff-Faris rule: "a decision overruling a prior authority may at times deny a litigant due process if applied retroactively." Lemon, supra, 411 U.S. at 211 (Dissent of Douglas, J., Brennan, J. and Stewart, J.) The City submits that the act of the state court denies due process of law in this instance.

V.

DUE PROCESS IS A PROTECTION AGAINST ARBITRARINESS AND INSURES EQUAL TREATMENT WITHIN A COURT SYSTEM.

It has been said that the rationale underlying the principle against ex post facto laws has been the revulsion against the unlimited use of power by public officials. J. Hall, General Principles of Criminal Law, 65 (2 Ed. 1960). Procedural due process also performs a similar function against the arbitrary use of power. Corwin, The Constitution And What It Means Today, 483 (1978) And it is submitted, that procedural due process is a protection against arbitrary and unequal treatment by the courts. "The federal guaranty of due process extends to state action through its judicial as well as its legislative, executive or administrative branch of government." Brinkerhoff-Faris, supra, 281 U.S. at 680.

The importance of equal treatment before the courts has long been recognized by this Court. Under equal protection standards in Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Railway v. Ellis, 165 U.S. 150 (1897), this Court found an attorney's fee an impediment to equal access to the court system. Similarly, in Tapp*, 279 Ky. 423, 130 S.W. 2d 848 (1939); *Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Chambers v. Baltimore & Ohio Railway, 207 U.S. 142 (1907), the Court stated in a case where access to the court was denied in wrongful death actions:

> The right to sue and defend in courts is the alternative of force. In an organized society it is the right conservative of all other rights, and lies at the foundation of orderly government. It is one of the highest and most essential privileges of citizenship . . . . 207 U.S. at 148.

Later in Truax v. Corrigan, 257 U.S. 312 (1921), this Court found the construction and application of a state statute by Arizona's highest court that prevented a business from obtaining injunctive relief from strike activities to be a denial of due process of law and equal access to the court. 257 U.S. at 340.

Access to the courts by guaranteeing equal treatment, grounded in the due process clauses of the Fourteenth and Fifth Amendments, was the subject of considerable discussion in this Court in the early 1970's. See Boddie v. Connecticut, 401 U.S. 391 (1971); Ortwein v. Schwab, 410 U.S. 654 (1973); U.S. v. Kras, 409 U.S. 434 (1973); Huffman v. Boerson, 406 U.S. 337 (1972); Frederick v. Schwartz, 402 U.S. 937 (1971); Meltzer v. LeCraw, 402 U.S. 654 (1971); Beverly v. Scotland Urban Enterprises, 402 U.S. 955 (1971).

The City submits, that if equal access to the dispute resolving process of our form of government is considered so fundamental as to be protective of all other rights, then it can be expected that a decision by the courts will treat all citizens to be affected by it equally. To do anything less is to deny due process of law.

CONCLUSION

Review by this Court is necessary to correct a situation, which, if left as it is, not only will severely impair the system of funding municipal fire departments in the State of West Virginia, but undermines a municipalities' efforts to treat each citizen equally. It is a matter of substantial public importance and concern, and it is respectfully submitted that the petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Rulings on Certified Questions Affirmed

Miller, Justice

1. "Where certain ordinances of the City of Wheeling impose upon owners of property a police service charge based upon the value of property, as determined from the land books and personal property books of the Ohio County Assessor, such ordinances impose, in fact, an ad valorem tax upon property, and where, without regard to the police service charge, property within the City of Wheeling is taxed to the maximum amount permitted under W.Va. Const., art. X, § 1, known as the 'Tax Limitation Amendment,' and W.Va. Code, 11-8-6d [1949], such ordinances violate that constitutional provision." Syllabus, Hare v. City of Wheeling, _____ W.Va. _____, 298 S.E. 2d 820 (1982.)

2. The character of a tax is determined not by its label but by analyzing its operation and effect.

3. The essential characteristic of an ad valorem tax, as its name suggests, is that the tax is levied according to the value of the property. Also, assessment on a regular basis is a common characteristic.

4. No matter how fairly apportioned an ad valorem property tax may be, if its amount exceeds the constitutional levy limits prescribed by Section 1 of Article X of the Constitution of West Virginia, it is void.

5. Once an ad valorem tax is found to exist under a municipal ordinance and the municipality is already at the maximum ad valorem rates prescribed by law, such additional ad valorem tax violates Section 1 of Article X of the Constitution of West Virginia.

6. Generally, when a statute or ordinance is declared unconstitutional, it is inoperative, as if it had never been passed.

7. Ordinarily, in the absence of any statutory right permitting recovery, a voluntary payment of a tax made under a statute which is later declared unconstitutional cannot be recovered.

Miller, Justice:

The issues in this certified case arose when the City of Fairmont filed suit against Pitrolo Pontiac-Cadillac and Acme Land Company to collect delinquent fire service fees. The defendants sought to defeat the collection by claiming that the City fire service charge was an ad valorem tax and violated the provisions of Section 1 of Article X of the Constitution of West Virginia. While this case was pending in the circuit court, we issued our opinion in Hare v. City of Wheeling, _____ W.Va. _____, 298 S.E. 2d 820 (1982), where we said in its single Syllabus:

> Where certain ordinances of the City of Wheeling impose upon owners of property a police service charge based upon the value of property, as determined from the land books and personal property books of the Ohio County Assessor, such ordinances impose, in fact, an ad valorem tax upon property, and where, without regard to the police service charge, property within the City of Wheeling is taxed to the maximum amount permitted under W.Va. Const., art. X, § 1, known as the 'Tax Limitation Amendment,' and W.Va. Code, 11-8-6d [1949], such ordinances violate that constitutional provision.

The circuit court held that the ordinance was unconstitutional under Hare. It also concluded that the ruling in Hare was applicable as against the City's argument that Hare should not be made applicable to delinquent taxes accruing prior to the date of the Hare opinion. We agree with the circuit court's decision on both issues.

There is no argument that the maximum levy provisions of Section 1 of Article X relate to ad valorem taxes on real and personal property.[1] Hare, supra; Appalachian Power Company v. The County Court of Mercer County, 146 W.Va. 118, 118 S.E. 2d 531 (1961); Bee v. City of Huntington, 114 W.Va. 40, 171 S.E. 539 (1933); Finlayson v. City of Shinnston, 113 W.Va. 434, 168 S.E. 479 (1933.)

We are asked to distinguish the Hare case by characterizing the tax in this case as a service fee rather than a property tax. The City argues that Hare did not recognize the distinction between a service fee and a property tax. Because W.Va. Code, 8-13-13, authorizes imposition of fees for municipal services, the City claims that its fire service charge should be sustained as a fee and not as a property tax. Furthermore, the City suggests that there are differences between a fee and a property tax. First, a fee is usually imposed for some specific purpose, and in the present case it is for fire protection. Second, a property tax ordinarily creates a lien and is not enforceable against the taxpayer personally; whereas, a fee does not create a lien and may be enforced personally.

This issue of property tax versus service fee was raised in Hare, although not as extensively argued, and we stated:

[1]The maximum tax limitations contained in Section 1 of Article X is:

"[T]he aggregate of taxes assessed in any one year upon personal property . . . shall not exceed fifty cents on each one hundred dollars of value thereon and upon all property owned, used and occupied by the owner thereof exclusively for residential purposes and upon farms occupied and cultivated by their owners or bona fide tenants one dollar; and upon all other property situated outside of municipalities, one dollar and fifty cents; and upon all other such property situated within municipalities, two dollars."

"The issue before this Court, therefore, is whether the police service charge promulgated by the City of Wheeling was a fee not precluded by the Tax Limitation Amendment, or whether the police service charge was, in fact, an ad valorem tax upon property enacted in violation of the Tax Limitation Amendment." _____ W.Va. at _____, 298 S.E. 2d at 825. We then proceeded to cite Dawson v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co., 255 U.S. 288, 65 L.Ed. 638, 41 S.Ct. 272 (1921),[2] and Hukle v. City of Huntington, 134 W.Va. 249, 58 S.E. 2d 780 (1950), to the effect that the character of a tax is determined not by its label but by analyzing its operation and effect, and concluded:

> It is without question that the police service charge in this action is, in fact, an ad valorem tax upon property. The ordinances were imposed upon the owners of property within the City of Wheeling, and the amount to be collected was directly related to the assessed value of that property. Pursuant to Ordinance No. 7278, the value of property for purposes of the ordinances was to be determined from the land books and personal property books of the Ohio County Assessor. _____ W.Va. at _____, 298 S.E. 2d at 826.

When we turn to the pertinent provisions of the City of Fairmont Ordinance No. 524, we believe that the tax is an ad valorem tax and not a service fee. Section 2 of the ordinance imposes and assesses on all residential, commercial, industrial, or other buildings within the city, the amount of fifty-five cents per one hundred dollars of the value of such buildings.[3] This section also prescribes the same rate of tax for all tangible personal property, goods, and chattels. The value according to the ordinance is "that as fixed for tax purposes by the Assessor of the County, or by the Board of Public Works of the State."[4]

[2] Dawson v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co., supra, is relied on in the present case by the City but, if anything, it seems opposite to the City's position. Justice Brandeis, speaking for a unanimous court, concluded that it was a property tax since "[t]o levy a tax by reason of ownership of property is to tax the property." 255 U.S. at 294, 65 L.Ed. at 646, 41 S.Ct. at 275.

Under Section 3 of the ordinance the tax is collected in LEVIED: There is hereby imposed and assessed upon the respective owner of all residential, commercial, industrial or other buildings of every kind and nature regardless of the type or types of construction, situate within the City, the amount of fifty-five cents ($.55) per one hundred dollars of the value of such residential, commercial, industrial or other buildings, the value being that as fixed for tax purposes by the Assessor of the County, or by the Board of Public Works of the State, and where no value has been fixed then the value shall be determined and fixed by the Finance Director. In order to determine such value when no value has been fixed for tax purposes as aforesaid, the Finance Director may make or cause to be made such reports, investigations and surveys as may be requisite.

There is hereby imposed and assessed upon the respective owners of all tangible personal property, goods and chattels located within the City, the amount of fifty-five cents ($.55) per one hundred dollars of the value of such personal property, as aforesaid, the value being that as fixed for tax purposes by the Assessor of the County, or by the Board of Public Works of the State, and where no such value has been fixed by the Finance Director. In order for tax purposes as aforesaid, the Finance Director may make or cause to be made such reports, investigations and surveys as may be requisite.

The language in this section is essentially the same as contained in the original Ordinance No. 221, except that as to the amount of the tax which has been increased by amendments from an original twenty cents per one hundred dollars of value to the fifty-five cents per one hundred dollar value.

two semiannual installments.[5] The first is due and payable on October 1 and the second on April 1 of each year.[6] This section further states that the tax "shall be collected in the same manner as municipal taxes are collected under the statutes of the State by the Sheriff of the County."[7]

The distinction between an ad valorem tax and other taxes has been discussed in a number of cases. In re City of Enid, 195 Okla. 365, 158 P.2d 348 (1945), contains a lengthy review of various authorities which have considered the question and the court concluded:

> In the early case of Society for Savings v. Coite, 73 U.S. 594, 6 Wall. 594, 18 L.Ed. 897, it was pointed out that whenever a property tax was imposed by law, provision was made that the value of the property be ascertained by appraisement and that the tax be assessed upon the appraised value of the property. The essential difference between an ad valorem tax and any COLLECTIONS: The rate and fees levied and assessed by this Ordinance shall be collected from each user in two semiannual installments; the first of such installments being due and payable on October 1 of each year and a like installment being due and payable on April 1 of each year. Such rates, fees and rentals imposed, levied and assessed pursuant to this Ordinance shall be collected in the same manner as municipal taxes of the City are collected under the statutes of the State by the Sheriff of the County, provided that the City shall reimburse and pay such Sheriff for the costs of such collections so made; provided further, however, that such rates, fees and rentals as are levied and imposed against property otherwise exempt from taxation, or otherwise not collected by said Sheriff, shall be collected by the City Treasurer.

[6]Under the State property tax statutes, real and personal property taxes are payable semiannually by October 1 and April 1 or they become delinquent. W.Va. Code, 11A-1-13.

In Callaway v. City of Overland Park, 211 Kan. 646, 651, 508 P. 2d 902, 907 (1973), the court made this distinction:

> The term 'excise tax' has come to mean and include practically any tax which is not an ad valorem tax. An ad valorem tax is a tax imposed on the basis of the value of the article or thing taxed. An excise tax is a tax imposed on the performance of an act, the engaging in an occupation or the enjoyment of a privilege. (See 15A Words and Phrases, p. 150.) (Emphasis added.)

The Maryland Supreme Court used this general definition of a property tax in Weaver v. Prince George's County, 281 Md. 349, 357-58, 379 A.2d 399, 403-04 (1977):

> The consensus of opinion appears to be that a property tax is a charge on the owner of property by reason of his ownership alone without regard to any use that might be made of it, Bromley v. McCaughn, 280 U.S. 124, 136, 50 S.Ct. 46, 74 L.Ed. 226 (1929); Dawson v. Kentucky Distilleries Co., 255 U.S. 288, 294, 41 S.Ct. 272, 65 L.Ed. 638 (1921); *Flint v. > Finally, the property tax and the excise tax may be differentiated by the methods used to impose them and to fix their amount. Thus, it has been held that where a tax is levied directly by the Legislature without assessment and is measured by the extent to which a privilege is exercised by a taxpayer without regard to the nature or value of his assets, it is an excise. Where, however, the tax is computed upon a valuation of the property and is assessed by assessors, and where the failure to pay the tax results in a lien against the property, it is a property tax, even though a privilege might be included in the valuation. Montgomery County, Maryland v. Maryland Soft Drink Association, Inc., 281 Md. 116, 127-28, 377 A.2d 486 (1977); Walker v. Bedford, 93 Colo. 400, 26 P.2d 1051, 1053 (1933); *City of De Land v. Analyzing the ordinance, it is apparent that it closely resembles the general State ad valorem property tax for real and personal property. The City utilizes the assessments made by the county assessor and the State Board of Public Works for the general property tax to determine the value of the property subject to the City's tax. The tax payments are required to be made semiannually and the due dates are the same as the State property tax. The sheriff is empowered to collect the City tax, the same as the State tax. The rate of tax is fifty-five cents for each one hundred dollars of value which is based on the traditional ad valorem property tax concept, the value of the property. The only difference is that under the State act a lien is imposed on real property for the taxes assessed. W.Va Code, 11A-1-2. A State statute[8] provides as does the ordinance[9] that delinquent taxes are debts that may be sued upon.

We do not view the absence of a provision for a lien right in the ordinance to be controlling in identifying whether the ordinance is a property tax. Nor do we believe that a critical distinction can be made over the fact that only buildings are assessed under the ordinance rather than the entire fee. The essential characteristic of an ad valorem tax, as its name suggests, is that the tax is levied according to the value of the property. Also, assessment on a regular basis is a common characteristic. How or who determines the value of the property is not a critical element in analyzing whether the tax is an ad valorem tax.

[8]W.Va. Code, 11A-2-2, provides:

Taxes are hereby declared to be debts owing by the taxpayer, for which he shall be personally liable. After delinquency, the sheriff may enforce this liability by appropriate action in any court of competent jurisdiction. No such action shall be brought after five years from the time the action accrued.

[9]Section 13 of the ordinance states:

PENALTIES, DISCOUNT: The rates and fees assessed pursuant to the provisions of this Ordinance shall be a debt due the City and may be collected by proceedings instituted in courts of appropriate jurisdiction, or in such manner as provided by West Virginia Code 8-13-15. A penalty of ten percent (10%) of the rate or fee shall be added for any default for a period of thirty (30) days or less in payment of such rate or fee, and for each succeeding thirty (30) days elapsing thereafter before payment there shall be an additional penalty of one and one-half percent (1-1½%). Provided, that a discount of two and one-half percent (2½%) shall be allowed on the first semiannual installment payment due April 1st if paid thirty (30) days prior to the said date each year, and a like discount of two and one-half percent (2½%) shall be allowed on the second semiannual installment payment due October 1st if paid thirty (30) days prior to the said date each year.

The City argues that property owners having buildings are the logical class of users of fire protection and, therefore, the charge being based on the value of their building is an eminently fair way of apportioning it for fire service. We have no quarrel with this abstract proposition. If we were dealing with an apportionment issue, the argument would make good sense. The issue here, however, is not one of apportionment.[10] This case involves the question of whether our constitutional limitation on maximum rates for ad valorem property taxes has been exceeded. As in the Hare case, it is admitted that the City is already at the maximum levy rate authorized by W.Va. Code, 11-8-6d, which is the statute allocating to municipalities their maximum share of the levy rates established in Section 1 of Article X of our Constitution.[11] Consequently, we are [10]This was the issue in City of Moundsville v. Steele, 152 W.Va. 465, 164 S.E. 2d 430 (1968), where we upheld under W.Va. Code, 8-13-13, a paving fee based on a lineal front foot assessment against the claim that it violated the uniformity provisions of Section 9 of Article X of the Constitution of West Virginia. Such an assessment not being based on value would not violate Section 1 of Article X.

[11]In Hare v. City of Wheeling, _____ W.Va. at _____, 298 S.E. 2d at 824, we said:

> In response to the Tax Limitation Amendment [Section 1 of Article X], the West Virginia Legislature enacted W.Va. Code, 11-8-1, et seq. The purpose of that article is generally to provide the maximum rates, within the restrictions of the Tax Limitation Amendment, for levies which may be laid upon property by the various taxing units of the State. Taxing units are defined in W.Va. Code, 11-8-4 [1933], municipalities constituting one such unit. Property is classified for levy purposes by W.Va. Code, 11-8-5 [1961], and the aggregate of taxes imposed upon the different property classifications by the taxing units is established by W.Va. Code, 11-8-6 [1939]. The specific levies permitted to be imposed by each taxing unit, such levies to be within the aggregate levy, is provided by W.Va. Code, 11-8-6a through W.Va. Code, 11-8-7. The maximum levy which may be imposed by municipalities is provided by W.Va. Code, 11-8-6d [1949]. (Footnotes omitted) compelled to conclude that no matter how fairly apportioned an ad valorem property tax may be, if its amount exceeds the constitutional levy limits prescribed by Section 1 of Article X of the Constitution of West Virginia, it is void.[12]

An argument is also made that the Hare decision, involving as it did a police service fee, can be distinguished from the fire service charge in the present case by following McCoy v. City of Sistersville, 120 W.Va. 471, 199 S.E. 260 (1938). In note 7 of Hare, we discussed McCoy and several related cases and began by stating: "Prior decisions of this Court have not directly addressed the validity of a municipal ordinance, promulgated pursuant to W.Va. Code, 8-13-13 [1971], in terms of whether such ordinance constituted an ad valorem tax upon property in excess of the limitations established by the Tax Limitation Amendment." _____ W.Va. at _____, 298 S.E.2d at 825.

The primary issue in McCoy involved the constitutionality of certain municipal fees including a fire service charge under Section 9 of Article X of our Constitution which requires that municipal statutes shall be uniform.[13] Most of the ordinance was declared unconstitutional. The fire service charge was held constitutional because the court found it to be uniform since "the owners of the building and chattels

[12]Although not an issue here, we recognize that Section 1 of Article X provides for 50% excess levies and that other constitutional provisions also have an impact on the maximum levy rates. W.Va. Const. art. X, §§ 7, 8 & 10.

[13]Section 9 of Article X states:

> The legislature may, by law, authorize the corporate authorities of cities, towns and villages, for corporate purposes, to assess and collect taxes; but such taxes shall be uniform, with respect to persons and property within the jurisdiction of the authority imposing the same.

may be fairly said to be users of the services provided for their protection." 120 W.Va. at 478, 199 S.E. at 263. The court's discussion of the impact of Section 1 of Article X was at best ambiguous: "If the assessed value were used, and the fee assessed, a serious question would have been raised as to a violation of the limitation amendment." 120 W.Va. at 478, 199 S.E. at 263.[14]

The argument that McCoy can be read to sanction an ad valorem tax on buildings to support a charge for fire services under W.Va. Code, 8-13-13, is unfounded. There can be no question that buildings affixed to the land are a part of the realty and, therefore, can be taxed as real property. Mr. Klean Car Wash, Inc. v. Ritchie, _____ W.Va. _____, 244 S.E. 2d 553 (1978); State Road Commission v. Curry, 155 W.Va. 894, 187 S.E. 2d 632 (1974); see also Whited v. Louisiana Tax Commission, 178 La. 877, 152 So. 552 (1934). Even in those situations where structures are deemed fixtures, they constitute personal property and are still taxable. *Blair v. The ordinance as to fire protection provides for an assessment on buildings and chattels. Giving to the statute, and the ordinance adopted thereunder, a liberal construction, the owners of the buildings and chattels may fairly be said to be the users of the services provided for their protection. True, these assessments are based on the value of the buildings and chattels, but no reference is made to the assessed values on which levies are laid, nor is the entire value of real estate in particular made the basis of the assessment, but only the buildings located thereon. If the assessed value were used, and the fee assessed, a serious question would have been raised as to a violation of the limitation amendment, and as the matter stands, the validity of the assessment as to personal property remains in doubt, the only saving feature being that the assessment as to this class of property is not based on the assessed value for tax purposes. On the whole, we conclude and hold that the proposed ordinance as applied to fire protection should be upheld. 120 W.Va. at 478, 199 S.E. at 263.

that if the owners of property are required to pay the government a sum based upon the value of the property, this is an ad valorem tax. Once an ad valorem tax is found to exist under a municipal ordinance and the municipality is already at the maximum ad valorem rates prescribed by law, such additional ad valorem tax violates Section 1 of Article X of our Constitution.

Finally, the City argues that we should hold that Hare is prospective only thus enabling the City to collect delinquent fire service fees that have accrued before the date of the Hare decision. This we decline to do since the circuit court in the present case found the City's ordinance to be unconstitutional under Hare — a finding that we have confirmed. We have utilized principles of retroactivity in certain cases when we have created new principles of law which have marked a clear departure from our prior law. E.g., LaRue v. LaRue, _____ W.Va. _____, _____ S.E. 2d _____ (No. 15578, 5/25/83); Sitzes v. Anchor Motor Freight, Inc., _____ W.Va. _____, 289 S.E. 2d 679 (1982); Bond v. City of Huntington, _____ W.Va. _____, 276 S.E. 2d 539 (1981); Ables v. Mooney, _____ W.Va. _____, 264 S.E. 2d 424 (1979); Bradley v. Appalachian Power Company, _____ W.Va. _____, 256 S.E. 2d 879 (1979). These new legal principles have resulted in the main from this Court's traditional power to create and modify common law principles. We have pointed out that this is a power traditionally exercised by other appellate courts. See Morningstar v. Black and Decker Manufacturing Company, Inc. _____ W.Va. _____, 253 S.E. 2d 666 (1979).

However, where a statute or an ordinance is declared unconstitutional, a different rule applies. It is generally held that when a statute or ordinance is declared unconstitutional, it is inoperative, as if it had never been passed. E.g., Shirley v. Getty Oil Company, 367 So.2d 1388 (Ala. 1979); Kozlowski v. Kozlowski, 80 N.J. 378, 403 A.2d 902 (1979); Stanton v. Lloyd Hammond Produce Farms, 400 Mich. 135, 253 N.W. 2d 114 (1977); Sadler v. Connolly, 175 Mont. 484,

575 P. 2d 51 (1978); 16 Am. Jur. 2d Constitutional Law § 256 (1979). In Morton v. Godfrey L. Cabot, Inc., 134 W.Va. 55, 63 S.E. 2d 861 (1949), we recognized this rule in Syllabus Point 2, which was based on Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U.S. 425, 30 L.Ed. 178, 6 S.Ct. 1121 (1886). In Morton v. Godfrey L. Cabot, Inc., supra, we also recognized the qualification to this absolute rule as set out in Chicot County Drainage District v. Baxter State Bank, 308 U.S. 371, 374, 84 L.Ed. 329, 332-33, 60 S.Ct. 317, 318 (1940), where the United States Supreme Court stated: "It is quite clear, however, that such broad statements as to the effect of the determination of unconstitutionality must be taken with qualifications. The actual existence of a statute, prior to such a determination, is an operative fact and may have consequences which cannot justly be ignored."

In the present case, we conclude that the City may not proceed to collect delinquent fire service taxes because its ordinance has been found to be unconstitutional.[15]

Although we have concluded that the City may not pursue delinquent fire service taxes accruing before the date of Hare, this does not mean that the City is liable to the taxpayers for taxes paid pursuant to the ordinance which has been found to be unconstitutional. The general rule is that, ordinarily, in the absence of any statutory right permitting recovery, a voluntary payment of a tax made under a statute which is later declared unconstitutional cannot be recovered.[14] E.g., Little v. Bowers, 134 U.S. 547, 33 L.Ed. 1016, 10 S.Ct. 620 (1890); Berry v. Daigle, 322 A. 2d 320 (Me. 1974); State v. Silas, 92 N.M. 434, 589 P. 2d 674 (1979); Coca-Cola Company v. Coble, 33 N.C. We, therefore, affirm the circuit court's rulings on the certified questions to the effect that the ordinance is unconstitutional and that the City may not seek to collect its delinquent fire service charges.

[15]In Blankenship v. Minton Chevrolet, Inc., _____ W.Va. _____, 266 S.E. 2d 902 (1979), we dealt with a somewhat related problem, the enforceability of judgments rendered by justices of the peace prior to our decision in State ex rel. Shrewsbury v. Poteet, 157 W.Va. 540, 202 S.E. 2d 628 (1974). In State ex rel. Shrewsbury v. Poteet, supra, we had held that the justice of the peace fee system created a pecuniary interest in justice. We held in Blankenship v. Minton Chevrolet, Inc., supra, that the judgments entered prior to the date of State ex rel. Shrewsbury v. Poteet, supra, were not void ab initio but voidable. In the present case, it is not prior judgments obtained by the City which are at issue, but its right to continue to prosecute and collect delinquent fire service taxes accruing prior to the date of the Hare opinion.

Rulings on Certified Questions Affirmed.

NO. CC935 CITY OF FAIRMONT, ETC., V. PITROLO PONTIAC-CADILLAC CO., ET AL.

McGraw, Chief Justice, concurring:

The controversy in the present case superficially concerns whether the charge levied by the City of Fairmont for fire protection is a fee or a property tax. In reality, however, the larger question is whether the court should label such charges "fees" in order to avoid the constitutional restrictions placed by the people on the imposition of property taxes.

Any analysis of the relationship between state or local government and its citizenry in West Virginia must begin with art. II, § 2 of the West Virginia Constitution, which provides, "The powers of government reside in all the citizens of the State, and can be rightfully exercised only in accordance with their will and appointment." In State ex rel. Skinner v. Dostert, 278 S.E. 2d 624, 629 (W.Va. 1981), the court discussed the important historical shift in the theory of government which was precipitated by the great American experiment in democracy: "The American constitutional system, under which West Virginia's government is organized, W.Va. Const. art. 1, § 1, changed substantially the operative theory of sovereignty and identified the sovereign, whose will legitimizes authority, as the people."

In exercising that sovereign authority, the people of West Virginia, through the Tax Limitation Amendment of 1932, W.Va. Const. art. X, § 1, acted to confine government spending within what was perceived to be reasonable limits. Although there existed a strong belief that essential governmental services should still be provided, the will of the people was that services should be sacrificed when governmental expenditures reached a certain level deemed intolerable. The challenge for government became to provide essential services within these constitutionally mandated limits. Essential local governmental services included provision for the public safety and general welfare — police and fire protection; waste disposal — solid and liquid; and streets. The mandate of the people was that these essential services should be provided first, with other types of nonessential services being provided only if surplus revenues were available. This required that priorities be established to ensure that essential services be provided at the lowest possible cost to the taxpayer.

Government, however, failed to rise to the occasion and sought to avoid its constitutional responsibilities. The strategy which evolved was to utilize tax dollars properly meant for the provision of essential services to fund nonessential services. Commenting upon this expansion in local government, one leading authority has noted,

> The rapid development of community service and the steady expansion of municipal functions . . . has rendered the equitable raising and distribution of funds for public purposes of prime importance. The financial problem . . . is among the most serious. As the activities of the city grow the cost of municipal service rapidly advances. Many things essential to urban life, which were formerly in private hands, are now being gradually socialized, and as a result are becoming customary municipal functions. City expenditures expand far beyond the increase of the community in wealth and population . . . . Continuously increasing pressure for more and better community service . . . and the increase of city officers and servants and bureaucratic complications entailed by it, have involved great and increasingly greater expenditures. Hence fresh sources of revenue must be found.

E. McQUILLEN, THE LAW OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS § 39.02 at 3-4 (1970).

After diverting tax revenues into these new areas of governmental endeavor, government began charging its citizenry "fees" for the provision of traditional essential services. By attempting to call a spade a shovel, political leaders, pressed by the demands of diverse constituency groups within local governmental entities, have sought to avoid the will of the people that the growth of government be limited. Ironically, it was many of these same political leaders who helped spur passage of the Property Tax Limitation [Amendment] of 1982, W.Va. Const. art. X, § 1b, which further constrained the ability of local governments in West Virginia to raise revenue. To wiggle off the sharp hook which they have fashioned for themselves, these political leaders now turn to the court and ask it to label a "tax" a "fee."

Engaging in this type of subterfuge and sophistry is nothing new to West Virginia where avoiding limitations on revenue-raising ability is concerned. In Bee v. City of Huntington, 114 W.Va. 40, 171 S.E. 539 (1933), local governmental leaders argued that the Tax Limitation Amendment of 1932 only limited the level of taxes levied to current expenses and did not prevent the levying of taxes necessary to meet existing indebtedness even if it meant that total taxes levied would be in excess of the constitutional maximum. Judge Kenna, in a concurring opinion, identified the practical problem facing the Court:

> On the one hand, it is urged that we are faced by the possibility of a breakdown of local government in a large number of the taxing units throughout the state through lack of money realized from taxation to provide for their essential functions, and, on the other hand, that the sovereign will of the people, expressed by them in the very instrument to which these taxing units owe their existence, will be thwarted in a matter of vital importance.

114 W.Va. at 50, 171 S.E. at 544.

The majority in Bee correctly identified the Court's duty in addressing this problematic issue as "the humble one of construing the constitution by the language it contains." 114 W.Va. at 46-47, 171 S.E. at 542, quoting, People v. Draper, 15 N.Y. 532, 546 (1857). The court noted the spuriousness of the argument advanced by the local governments involved: "It is argued . . . that the limitation should be ignored in levying taxes necessary for orderly government, which would mean that a limitation of levies for the operation of government cannot be effected even by constitutional proclamation. This position . . . is without legal basis." 114 W.Va. at 47, 171 S.E. at 543.

The court in Bee quoted language used by the Supreme Court of North Carolina in French v. Board of Commissioners, 74 N.C. 692, 696-97 (1876), which when faced with a similar problem stated,

> If what are often miscalled the "necessary expenses" of a county exceed the limitation prescribed by law, the necessity cannot justify the violation of the Constitution . . . . The old proverb, "cut the garment according to the cloth," has in it much practical wisdom. It is illustrated every day in private life, and is the foundation of individual integrity, contentment and success. (Court's emphasis.)

114 W.Va. at 48, 171 S.E. at 543. Therefore, the Bee court held that the limitations on assessments prescribed by the Tax Limitation Amendment of 1932 embraced levies for all purposes, including previous bonded debts, and that the various fiscal bodies throughout the state were required to provide for the current requirements of existing contractual obligations before levying for current governmental expenses. Syllabus Point 1, Bee, supra.

As the court stated in Bee, "The theory of organized society rests in the assumption that the community is capable of self-government." 114 W.Va. at 49, 171 S.E. at 544. Self-governance, however, can be severely crippled by misguided leadership. Taxation is a necessary prerequisite for the provision of essential services by government. Without revenue, services cannot be provided. Manipulation of labels in order to allow government to raise revenue is a deceitful exercise in which this Court must not engage. If the political leadership insists on capping available revenue through such devices as the Property Tax Limitation [Amendment] of 1982, then they must live with their decision and not expect the court to bail them out by circumventing constitutional provisions.

An examination of the dissident opinion in the present case reveals a pretense to engage in such circumvention because of the underlying social purpose of the fire protection charge and the consequences of labeling it a property tax. While making a stare decisis argument, the primary theme is that the fire protection charge is a fee rather than a property tax. This simplistic rationale is that while police protection is designed to safeguard the person and not the property, thereby making a charge based on property values a tax, fire protection is designed to safeguard property, thereby justifying basing the amount charged on property value. This proposition ignores the fact that most crimes are committed against property, and that fire protection is designed to prevent injury to human beings as well as damage to property.

Our dissident also discloses a more practical reason for his strained analysis. He believes that the Fairmont charge is a rational basis for charging citizens for fire protection and that eliminating this method will make municipal budgeting more difficult. No one would disagree with either of those assertions. However, that is not the question presented to the court.

Property tax limitation is a fundamental part of our state constitution. Any attempt to avoid its full force and effect is not only unconstitutional, but is an affront to the very integrity of our government and our people. The City's cry and our dissident's cry is one of "necessity." Our state's founders, however, anticipating that such pleas of necessity could be used by a few to fatally undermine the constitutional foundations of our government, provided that,

> The provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and of this State, are operative alike in a period of war as in time of peace, and any departure therefrom, or violation thereof, under the plea of necessity, or any other plea, is subversive of good government, and tends to anarchy and despotism.

West Virginia Constitution, art. I, § 3 (emphasis added.) Save for our lone dissident, this court refuses to stray from the wise course chartered by our founding fathers over a century ago and to avoid the plain language of our constitution under a "plea of necessity." Integrity in judges and courts is measured by firm allegiance to the language of the people as communicated through the Constitution and popular referenda. The majority has vindicated the integrity of the court.

Political leaders at the local level have made for themselves a bed in which they find it uncomfortable to lie. For example, in 1982, the West Virginia Municipal League, a quasi-public organization funded by tax dollars, W.Va. Code § 8-12-6 (1976), passed "A Resolution To Authorize A Proposed Amendment To The West Virginia Constitution, Property Tax Limitation and Homestead Exemption Amendment of 1982," which, in part, resulted in the subsequent amendment placing further limitations on the property tax as a source of local government revenue. West Virginia Municipal League, Resolutions and Policy at 2 (August 24, 1982.) Ironically, one year later, five of their twenty-one resolutions proposed increases in taxation to increase local governmental revenues. See West Virginia Municipal League, Resolutions and Policy, Resolutions 8, 10, 12, 14 and 19 (August 16, 1983.) In fact, in the present action, the West Virginia Municipal League filed an amicus curiae brief on behalf of the City of Fairmont certified by the Clerk of this Court as weighing one and three-eights pounds — some friend. The primary thrust of its brief distinguishing the instant case from Hare v. City of Wheeling, 298 S.E. 2d 820 (W.Va. 1982), is that fire service fees are different from police service fees because fire fees go to support firemen, while police service fees go to support policemen. Though this proposition is difficult to reject, it provides little solace, as well as little assistance in the resolution of the legal issue before the court.

The people have imposed strict taxing limits on the power of government to impose property taxes. It does not matter that the property tax is a rational method of charging for fire protection or that municipal budgeting will be more difficult.

NO. CC935 CITY OF FAIRMONT, ETC. V. PITROLO PONTIAC-CADILLAC CO., ET AL.

Neely, Justice dissenting:

This is preeminently a case requiring the application of stare decisis. This case should be controlled by McCoy v. Sistersville, 120 W.Va. 471, 199 S.E. 260 (1938.) In that case, we held the following: (1) the provision of the W.Va. Code (now Code, 8-13-13 [1971]) that allows cities to make separate charges for specific, enumerated services is constitutional; (2) cities may charge for fire protection under the authority of what is now Code, 8-13-13 [1971] on the basis of use; and (3) fees based on the value of improvements and personal property bear such a reasonable correlation to the actual use of fire protection that they are an appropriate basis on which to assess a user fee.[1]

Nothing has changed since McCoy was decided. Neither the statute nor the Constitution has been amended in any way relevant to this issue. Furthermore, the case of Hare v. City of Wheeling, _____ W.Va. _____, 298 S.E. 2d 820 (1982) does not conflict with McCoy, supra, and does not mandate or even imply the result we have reached today. In Hare, as in McCoy, we held that a user fee based on a property value that bears no correlation to actual use is unconstitutional as an ad valorem tax. In McCoy, we struck the fee for street lighting tied to property values for exactly the same reason that we struck the fee for police protection tied to property values in Hare. In neither instance was there any correlation between the value of one's property and the use of the service.

[1]We reaffirmed the constitutionality of the fire service fee in City of Charleston v. Board of Education, _____ W.Va. _____, 209 S.E.2d 55 (1974) in which we held that a "fee for service and protection is not a tax." (Syllabus.) That case is also noteworthy because it upheld charging the service fee to the Board of Education despite its tax exempt status.

Fire protection is very different from street lighting or police service. Police services are largely directed to the protection of human life and the preservation of order. Fire service is directed to the protection of property. It follows, therefore, that while police service is often most needed in lower income areas where violence is prevalent, fire protection is most needed by those who have significant property interests to protect. Furthermore, the owners of improved property enjoy a direct cash benefit in the form of reduced fire insurance rates in a municipality with efficient fire protection.

The Fairmont ordinance is carefully drawn to reflect this reality. The fire protection assessment is not based simply on the total value of property; rather it is based on the value of buildings, other improvements and personal property. There is no correlation between the ownership of land per se and the need for fire protection; but there is an almost perfect correlation between ownership of buildings and personal property and the use of fire protection services.[2] Of course, other variables affect the use of a fire department as well. Those who smoke in bed are more likely to be consumers of fire service; but it would require an intrusive government indeed to be able to base assessment of a user fee on evidence of such negligence. Government is the art of the possible, and the Fairmont ordinance does as much as is possible rationally to allocate fees for fire protection according to use.

Despite the rationality of the Fairmont ordinance, the majority now strike it down because they choose to label the assessment an ad valorem tax rather than a user fee.

[2] "Use" is a term of art here. I do not mean to imply that owners of valuable property have more fires. They "use" the existence of fire protection to obtain lower insurance premiums and to free assets which would otherwise have to be held in reserve to protect against the possibility of a destructive blaze. Because their original stake is larger, their use is greater.

Since Fairmont property is already taxed to the constitutional limit set by W.Va. Const., art. 10 § 1, they argue that any additional assessment is unconstitutional. Brief examination shows this particular ruling to be seriously flawed.

The reason is simple. The majority opinion goes to considerable lengths to demonstrate that an assessment based on value is ad valorem. One need not be a Latin scholar to agree. Although Fairmont's ordinance envisages an ad valorem system, it does not mandate a tax. "[A] tax is a pecuniary burden laid upon individuals, or, property, to support the government." In re Mytinger, 31 F.Supp. 977 (N.D. Texas, 1940.) (Emphasis added.) (How's that for citing a little obscure, out-of-state precedent?) Any tax is money raised by the government for general governmental purposes regardless of whether the taxing statute "dedicates" the tax to a particular purpose. A fee differs from a tax not in its method of collection, but in the perfect correlation between use of government service and payment for the service.

The people, guided by their elected leaders, have clearly communicated their priorities. They have instructed government leaders that they must devise new financing methods which do not include increases in property tax. That is the task to which such leaders must devote themselves.

Furthermore, it is not the job of the judiciary to suggest alternative forms of taxation to those found to be unconstitutional, and our dissident's suggestion to the contrary smacks of apologia. But if we must provide leadership, let us proceed with enlightened wisdom, not political rhetoric. The lesson to be learned from this case is that taxes upon real property which exceed the limits imposed by the Tax Limitation Amendment of 1932 are not valid. An approach which should work, if properly developed by capable legal minds or a legislative adjustment to the Code, would be one in which municipalities are empowered to levy a tax upon the total insurance coverage of all fire insurance policies sold within their corporate limits. This solution could easily be integrated into our existing tax structure. Such a methodology would be progressive and would tax those who most benefit from good fire protection — insurance companies which sell fire insurance policies. This tax would be easy to collect, given the limited number of fire insurance companies, and would avoid the potential equal protection problems inherent in any scheme based upon square footage.

Fairmont is not taxing property value. It is simply using property value as an accurate indirect measurement of the use of fire protection by members of that community. If individuals who paid the fire service fee could show that in fact some of the funds collected under that ordinance were used to support other public purposes — schools, police, street lights — then they could quite correctly argue the fee is an ad valorem tax in excess of the constitutional limit. Without such evidence, they are only arguing that fees charged for use are based on the value of what the fire department protects. Presumably, a private system of fire protection would also charge fees based on the value of what is protected. The only alternative would be to charge users a few thousand dollars every time they dial the local fire station. The absurdity of that approach serves to underline the rationality of the Fairmont ordinance.

No compelling public purpose is served by overruling McCoy, supra. In fact, this decision is certain to make a bad situation worse. Cities are being squeezed on all sides. At the same time that money from Washington is being cut, costs are rising and demands for services are increasing. The money to pay for municipal services will need to come from somewhere and the alternatives to the fire service fees are not overwhelmingly attractive. Is there a greater correlation between use of fire protection services and one's taxable income (the income tax option) or the volume of total purchases (the sales tax option) than there is to one's ownership of property? Is the current tax more regressive than alternatives? Do thousands of poor people own acres of valuable, improved municipal property while the rich escape the tax by living in hovels? The answers to all of these questions militate in favor of retaining the fire service fee.

It is amusing for a moment to contemplate some alternative means of assessing a user fee. If it is done on the basis of total square footage, then the owner of an entirely valueless but large warehouse pays more than the owner of a small jewelry store with a million dollar inventory. If the fee is assessed by frontage foot, then the owner of a long, low building pays more than the owner of a tall, skinny building. Furthermore, the raising of equal revenue by any other means of assessment siphons money away from the provision of services to costs related to the collection of the fee. Who measures square footage or front footage? If it is the taxpayer, who audits the results? Now all the administrative costs are borne by the assessor whose marginal costs for passing information to the city is negligible. And if the current user-based revenue source is replaced by an income tax, then we shall pay double the current fire protection fee: we shall still pay the City what we are paying now. Most of us, however, will also pay again as much in time and inconvenience when we fill out yet one more complicated form.

Most importantly, the structure of West Virginia taxation is predicated on the validity of the fire service fee. Municipalities are greatly limited in how they can tax.[3] If this fire service fee option is removed, some alternative must be made available so that vital services can continue. Until our legislature convenes next January the cities will be left without their expected revenue, but must presumably continue to provide necessary services. That will be no mean feat and the majority opinion is notably silent on exactly how this legerdemain is to be accomplished.

[3]A municipality can levy taxes only by virtue of authority delegated to it by the legislature. Fairmont v. Bishop, 69 W.Va. 308, 69 S.E. 802 (1910.) The limited powers of municipal corporations to tax are codified at the Code, 8-13-1 to 23 [1963].

Today's surprising decision disturbs legitimate expectations. It tells local elected officials that the way they have been going about their business is not good enough; but it does not spell out the progressive reform that will lead to a better world for all of us. I am reminded in this regard of the chap who took the handlebars from the front of his bicycle and placed them over the rear wheel; he achieved change without effecting improvement. Perhaps such intellectual curiosity is to be welcomed in graduate students; but caution is a more necessary trait in the judiciary. Today's decision is more notable for its sense of adventure than for its logic or consistency.

ORDER

The above styled and numbered causes came on to be heard on the complaint and defendants' motions to dismiss heretofore filed herein, and, after hearing the argument of counsel the Court is of the opinion that:

1. The Supreme Court of Appeals decision in Hare v. Wheeling, _____ W.Va. _____ (1982), controls the constitutionality of the City of Fairmont's fire protection service charge. Accordingly, the City of Fairmont's fire protection service charge, being City Ordinance No. 221, as amended, is hereby declared unconstitutional, there being no distinction of merit between a police protection fee and fire protection fee.

2. The Supreme Court of Appeals decision in Hare v. Wheeling, supra, is prospective in its application from entry of this Order. Accordingly, upon proper proof, plaintiff is entitled to recover from defendants for fees up and until the date of entry of this order.

Upon joint application of the parties the following questions are certified to the Supreme Court of Appeals for its decision, and the proceedings in this case stayed until such questions shall have been decided and the decision thereof certified back.

1. Whether the decision in Hare v. Wheeling, supra, controls the question of whether the fire protection service charge of the City of Fairmont is unconstitutional as an ad valorem tax?

2. Whether the decision in Hare v. Wheeling, supra, is prospective in its application only on the constitutionality of the fire protection service charge.

To all of which the parties reserve their respective objections and exceptions.

NO. 831259

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

October Term , 1983

CITY OF FAIRMONT, a Municipal corporation,
PETITIONER,

Vs.

PITROLO PONTIAC-CADILLAC COMPANY, a corporation, and
ACME LAND COMPANY, a corporation,
RESPONDENTS.

Respondents respectfully move this Court for the entry of an ORDER denying the Petition for Writ of Certiorari filed herein by the City of Fairmont. This motion is made pursuant to Rule 24, Rules of the United States Supreme Court and is based upon all documents of record and the following argument.

ARGUMENT

I

Petitioner argues that the United States Supreme Court has jurisdiction to consider this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S. C.A. 1257, and likewise claim a violation by the State Supreme Court of Appeals of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

Petitioner argues (page 1, second paragraph) that the decision of the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals has set up two classes of citizens in the City of Fairmont. One class being those who voluntarily PAID the "Fire Protection Fee" when billed by the City, and those who REFUSED to pay the fee claiming it was a TAX and as such was violative of the Tax Limitation Act of 1932 as amended.

II

THE ORDINANCE

A careful reading of the ORDINANCE itself, (City Ordinance No. 221, Section 2 thereof) shows as follows:

> "There is imposed and assessed upon the respective owners of all residential, commercial, industrial or other buildings of every type construction, situated within the City, , et'c."

Fire protection is designed to prevent injury to human beings as well as prevent damage to property as it is inevitable that fires in buildings can result in physical injury to persons.

A citizen who owns a building or buildings is classified as a user and is taxed, while a citizen who owns no building is not a user and is not taxed. Hence, the rational of the ORDINANCE is that only the user is entitled to the essential service of fire protection while the citizen who owns nothing and is not taxed, is not entitled to the essential service of fire protection, but who is, nevertheless, subject to injury by fire.

The City would have this Court believe that although the ORDINANCE itself creates two classes of citizens, the property owner, vis-a-vee the non-owner, (right to protection versus no right to protection), this is equal protection, while the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia in its ruling, has violated the Due Process provisions of the Constitution by creating two classes of citizens, the ones who paid v. the ones who fought and refused to pay. Critical to any discussion of Due Process is the question of fairness of actions proposed or taken.

The City's cry that while Police Protection is designed to safeguard the person and not the property, a charge based on property value is a tax, while on the other hand arguing that Fire Protection is designed to safeguard property, thereby attempting to justify a charge based on property value, is totally inconsistent.

This proposition ignores the fact that most crimes are committed against property and that Fire Protection is designed to prevent injury to human beings, as well as damage to property. The cry of impairment of funding for Municipal Fire Departments only emphasizes the failure of the City Government to rise to the edict established by the people and is an attempt by the City to avoid its Constitutional responsibilities.

III

CONCLUSION

REVIEW by this Court is not warranted as (1) There is no Federal Question involved. (2) There is no situation of National Interest involved and (3) The decision of the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals is based on State Statutes (Tax Limitation Amendment of 1932) and does not involve any Federal Constitutional or Statutory Questions. This appeal should not be granted.
